Set the beer up on a firm surface and expose the tap - ensuring a glass can be placed beneath for pouring beer. Beware of drips - mind your floor!

Allow the beer to settle, 5 hours should do it, however overnight is always preferable.

Once opened your beer should last a minimum of 5 days - and will last considerably longer if kept at the correct temperature.

Looking after your beer - Firkin

Keep your beer cool; around 10-15 degrees is best. Keep away from central heating and cooking.

Set the beer up on a very firm surface, we will lend you chocs. Lay the cask on its side with the small hole at top and the tap hole at front bottommost. Beware of drips - mind your floor!

Tap and spile; knock in the peg (spile) at the top and the tap at the front, making sure the tap is in the closed position. This can be a bit splashy, but is always good fun!

Allow the beer to settle for at least 5 hours, overnight is preferable.

Once opened your beer should last for 5 days - as long as you keep it at the correct temperature.
